

Product films for every capability shipped, in every format, at the pace of delivery.

Six AI agents went live for a client in one month, and each needed a launch film in three formats. I built a studio where a film is a React component, the brand is one file, and Claude Code turns a one-page brief into rendered videos.

ABOUT REALFAST

Production software in weeks, with senior engineers and frontier models.

An AI-native software delivery firm: legacy modernisation, AI agent workflows, Salesforce implementations, and AI transformation engagements, on an in-house platform called Exo. Pods of two to five senior engineers, agents doing most of the building, outcomes tied to metrics agreed before work starts. Clients include Z47, AVPN, TASC, Houzbay, BoardRoom, and Hypernative.

BACKED BY

The founders set the bar. They built and sold one engineering firm, then ran product and technology at Gojek.

Sidu Ponnappa

CEO, Co-founder

Co-founded C42 Engineering, acquired by Gojek in 2015. Then CIO of Gojek Singapore, MD of Gojek India, and a Gojek Group board member.

Aakash Dharmadhikari

CPTO, Co-founder

Co-founded C42. Group Chief Product Officer and board member at Gojek. Later CPO at Jiva.

Steve Sule

CFD, Co-founder

Former Partner at Edith Grove Capital, previously Arma Partners and M&A at Mahindra & Mahindra. Joined as an advisor, became a co-founder.

A one-page brief is the whole input. The agent does the rest.

content/nus-daily-digest/brief.md Product    Daily Digest. A scheduled, cited news digest of portfolio companies, posted to Slack.
Goal       One glanceable, sourced roundup each morning.
Audience   The investment team.
Formats     landscape, vertical, square.   Duration ~7s.
Tone        Calm, confident, editorial. A radar, not a decision engine.
Music       Understated corporate, gentle build.

This is the real brief for one of the seven films, lightly trimmed. Everything the studio needs fits on one card, and it reads like a note to a colleague, not a spec.

The brief, the script it produced, and the props file stay in the repo next to each other. Change one line months later and the film re-renders. That reproducibility is what a timeline in an editor can never give you.

One component renders every format. Nobody re-composes a shot by hand.

Landscape · presentations, web

Square · feed posts

Vertical · mobile 9 : 16

The same beat from the company briefs film, rendered three times from one React component. A template reads its own width and height and rearranges itself. Add a fifth social size to the format list once and every film in the library gains it.

Seven films in four weeks, for six agents and one capability update.

The rules the agent follows were each learned from a film that went wrong.

■ wide capture, letterboxed

■ re-composed for the tall frame

The vertical trap, and the fix. A desktop capture cannot fill a 9:16 frame and stay readable.
The rule: portrait capture first, re-composed card second, full-bleed pan with a big headline as the last resort.

01 Copy sells outcomes, not mechanics

No pipeline talk on screen. Six to eight words per headline, because video text is read in seconds.

02 Screenshots are the hero

Product output goes near full-bleed. Dense documents get a slow pan so their richness scrolls by.

03 One thing on screen at a time

Scenes dip to paper between beats. No crossfades showing two headlines at once.

04 Settle instead of push

Motion that pushes hard reads as advertising. A slow settle reads as confidence.

05 Real output, internal only

A real contract is more convincing than a blank one. Real client data stays inside, and every such film gets a shareable version.

Delivered in four weeks. Not yet measured: what it saved, and how the films landed.

7 films
from the first brief to the seventh render, for one client engagement

21 renders
across landscape, vertical, and square, none re-composed by hand

1 brand file
to change to re-theme the whole studio for another client

NOT MEASURED YET

How the films performed, and what a conventional edit would have cost. Next: the evaluation gate from the harness brief, a client re-theme end to end, and a video model behind the adapter contract.
